

Safety Leadership I: Introduction to Health and Safety Leadership

Effective and accountable leadership is an essential component of an organization's health and safety program. To make safety a reality, every leader must have a desire to make the workplace safe for all that enter. It's no secret – leaders have a greater responsibility for safety than anyone else in the organization. How they demonstrate the importance of safety can significantly impact outcomes. Each of the three modules in the health and safety leadership program is designed to give you the information and skills to establish and support an effective occupational health and safety system. Explore the development of a safety culture from three perspectives – programs, individuals and teams – and embed safety throughout all levels of the organization.

Note: Employers wishing to package all three modules together into one three-day Safety Leadership Program must submit a Private Training request.

Module 1: Introduction to Health and Safety Leadership

This ~7-hour in-person or scheduled online workshop explores the legalities of establishing an occupational health and safety management system (OHSMS) so you can quickly and efficiently adjust in the ever-changing environment of continuing care. Find out how to integrate strategic planning, change management and strategic communications within your OHSMS to help introduce and sustain successful change.
